

Stop Tribal Disenrollment: Indian Country simply cannot afford any additional trauma

“Disenrollment is a hold-over from a foreign government’s ‘final solution’ attempt once used to rid the land of Indians”

In western governments, sovereignty is derived from the people; part of an individual’s sovereignty is surrendered to the “order” via a social contract theory. In most instances, the contract is entered at birth or through some other legal means of citizenship admittance. A citizen is rarely divested of those rights and any divestment of citizenship requires heightened proof and due process.

In Indian Country, an individual typically has to petition for citizenship (usually at birth and sometimes later in life) and it’s not an automatic process. Once “enrolled” into the tribe, a set of rights and duties falls upon the individual as defined by their tribal nation. Too many Indians have upheld these obligations over the course of many years, only to be told they no longer belong to their tribal community.

These dismembered souls helped form the foundation upon which their tribal nations maintained and flourished tribal sovereignty, only to be told that the very same sovereignty they helped to provide was the blade that severed their spirits.

Since the turn of the century, tribal governments have quickened the dismemberment pace and it has become far too easy for tribal governments to “tribally divest” tribal citizens. These actions are a hold-over from a foreign government’s attempt at a “final solution” once used to rid the land of Indians, but it is now tribal governments who seek to rid their lands and financial obligations to Indians.

Tribal governments refuse to engage in local or national dismemberment conversations, citing the federal court decision Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez and calling the act of deciding who is enrolled to be a “sovereign” prerogative. But this is not a query of enrollment; that axiom is long accepted.

What should not be accepted is ancestral termination disguised under the Santa Clara Rubicon and silence of tribal governments and inter-tribal organizations. Continued failure to engage in any formal dialogue or to devise a tribal dismemberment solution may grant a podium for a federal solution to the violations of Indian’s civil and human rights.

Right now, it is mostly “grassroots” Indian leaders who are taking a stand, such as through today’s #StopDisenrollment social media movement, but what Indian Country urgently needs is elected tribal leaders to do or say something to help stop the self-termination and dismemberment before another Indian life is lost.

The dismemberment endemic has graduated to epidemic status, a fact clearly exemplified by Dr. Wilkins work. With less federally recognized Indians, dismembered Indians no longer qualify for federal and tribal programs. An area of grave concern is in the field of psychological trauma. American Indians already outpace the general public in suicide and depression as well as addictive traits such as alcoholism and drugs. Dismemberment Trauma is unique in one very simple accurate occurrence: it is Indians traumatizing Indians. Indian Country simply cannot afford any additional trauma. We have endured quite enough. A cure is immediately needed, from within Indian Country.

Sen. John McCoy stated a year ago: “I oppose disenrollment because it undermines an Indian’s - and in fact all of our - heritage and lineage.” Indian Country has created a new category of Indian who has had their identity undermined, their ancestry nulled, and their lives voided. In the final analysis, it will be Indian Country that will suffer from the dismemberment.

The Torres Martinez Desert Cahuilla Indians Propose to Build $2-Billion Replacement Prison

The Torres Martinez Desert Cahuilla Indians in Southern California proposes to build an 8,400-bed prison on its remote reservation next to the Salton Sea and lease it to the state — a project that would be the first of its kind in the nation.

The tribe and its American Indian business partners proposed to build and maintain a $2 billion state-of-the-art, medium-security prison to replace existing state prisons that are over crowded and obsolete.

The prison would be the largest in California, and one of the largest in the country. The state would then staff and run the facility and pay the tribe an annual rent of nearly $175 million.

The business concept of build-to-suit is not new but is unique in its applications to a prison. However, the proposal has merit since the proposed location is isolated and would allow for future expansion as needed.

But at least one local leader familiar with the project questions “whether the community as a whole has embraced the idea of building these institutions,” said Assembly member Eduardo Garcia, a Coachella Democrat whose district includes the site of the proposed prison.

Riverside County already has a minimum security prison in Thermal and is expanding its jail in Indio.

The Torres Martinez leaders, however, say their main motivation for the prison project is environmental.

Renderings show the facility would be built up against a mountain and bordered by open desert and agriculture.

The tribe says it wants to restore the dying Salton Sea, 11,000 acres of which are included in their land. Water would be drawn from an aquifer underneath the reservation to supply the prison and its thousands of inmates; hundreds of thousands of gallons in wastewater would then be filtered and pumped into the sea, according to Chairman Thomas Tortez.

“When I talk to my membership, they are adamant about having and seeing something done about the Salton Sea, and they’re tired of study after study after study,” he said. “They want to see something done that would be tangible, something that they could see.”

The tribe’s partners include Temecula-based Tribal Nations Rehabilitation & Corrections, a private land management company that is partnering with the tribe to develop the land and gain access to the water for the Salton Sea, and Phoenix-based Sage Concepts LLC. The California Tribal Business Alliance is supporting the tribe’s efforts.

Denis Turner, CEO of Tribal Nations Rehabilitation & Corrections said it has already secured more than $2 billion for the project.

He offers the report from the Legislative Analyst’s Office, which said the state’s 12 oldest prisons required more than $11 billion in infrastructure improvement. It recommended the state close two prisons due to extensive infrastructure problems.

CEO Denis Turner

The project offers a solution to the state’s infrastructure woes: The Department of Corrections could close its older prisons including the California Rehabilitation Center in Norco, the California Institution for Men in Chino and the California Institution for Women in Corona — and transfer both inmates and staff to the proposed desert facility.

However, Garcia said. “It’s not the right time for the conversation that the chairman has brought forward,” “We right now are in the prison-closing moment — not in the prison-building moment.”

So when will it be the right time to address the crisis? Are the inmates going to be set free upon the closing of the prisons? Is there even any discussion at the state level addressing the problem?

Maybe the Tribe should be talking to the federal prison officials as they are facing the same problems.

George Soros' Open Society Foundations Sets $220 Million To Fund Black Groups

Open Society Foundations, the philanthropic organization founded by billionaire George Soros, is investing $220 million in emerging organizations and leaders building power in Black communities across the U.S.

The largest share for the investment, $150 million, will be through a set of five-year grants to Black-led organizations focused on racial equality, the organization announced.

"It is inspiring and powerful to experience this transformational moment in the racial justice movement," Open Society Foundations President Patrick Gaspard said in a statement. "We are honored to be able to carry on the vital work of fighting for rights, dignity, and equity for oppressed people the world over started by our founder and chair, George Soros."

Some of the organizations receiving the grants are fighting for expanding voting rights, while others are fighting for police reform. Recipients of this set of investments include Black Voters Matter, Circle for Justice Innovations, Repairers of the Breach and the Equal Justice Initiative, according to Open Society Foundations.

In addition to the five-year grants, Open Society Foundations said it is also making a series of investments totaling $70 million in "more immediate efforts to advance racial justice."

The investment includes efforts to support local governments and organizations seeking to strengthen local expertise in understanding and navigating municipal budgets as cities "reimagine public safety" and move "beyond the culture of criminalization and incarceration."

The foundation is also investing in creating opportunities for students to enroll in internships and fellowships that focus on racial justice, democracy, organizing and mentorship.

The foundation's investments will also support ongoing efforts to fight voter suppression and ensure safe and secure elections amid the coronavirus pandemic.

"This is the time for urgent and bold action to address racial injustice in America," Alex Soros, George Soros's son and the deputy chair of the Open Society Foundations, said in a statement. "These investments will empower proven leaders in the Black community to reimagine policing, end mass incarceration, and eliminate the barriers to opportunity that have been the source of inequity for too long."

St. Louis, Missouri:

PAT MCCLOSKEY'S GUN DIDN'T WORK SO THE PROSECUTOR HAD IT FIXED & DECLARED IT LETHAL

Isn't Tampering With The Evidence Illegal in Missouri?

Source: HOTAIR Express

Remember the St. Louis couple, Mark and Patricia McCloskey who's security gate to their property was torn down by "Peaceful Protesters" that threatened to kill and their dog?

As of July 22, 2020, they are each being charged with a felony count of unlawful use of a weapon for stepping outside of their home with guns.

However, in Missouri, police and prosecutors must prove that a weapon is "readily" capable of lethal use when it is used in the type of crime with which the McCloskeys have been charged.

The gun Patricia McCloskey waved at protesters was inoperable when it arrived at the St. Louis police crime lab.

So Assistant Circuit Attorney Chris Hinckley, a member of Circuit Attorney Kim Gardner's staff ordered the crime lab staff to field strip the handgun and found it had been assembled incorrectly making the gun incapable of firing, according to documents obtained.

And after the lab tech's reassemble the gun they declared that it was "readily capable of lethal use." Circuit Attorney Kim Gardner used this false documentation to file charges against Patricia McCloskey.

Sounds like another illegal deep state Russia hocks and a clear violation of her Constitutional Civil Right.

According to the McCloskey's, the incorrect assembly of the gun wasn't an accident. The same gun had been used as a "prop" in a previous lawsuit and the McCloskey's had rendered it inoperable so that it could be brought into a courtroom.

In short, Patricia McCloskey's gun was non-functional and wouldn't shoot when she took it outside that day.

Mark McCloskey appeared on Tucker Carlson's show earlier this week and was asked about his guns being seized. He mentioned the requirement that police show the gun was capable of lethal use and said, "there will be some revelations that come out about that."

He didn't say at the time what those revelations would be but in retrospect it's clear he was alluding to the fact that Mrs. McCloskey's handgun was not functional.

The McCloskey's attorney said of the prosecutor's decision to reassemble the gun and then declare it lethal. "It's disheartening to learn that a law enforcement agency altered evidence in order to prosecute an innocent member of the community."

A law professor from St. Louis University explains that because the street on which protesters were marching was private property, the McCloskey's were probably within their rights under the state's castle doctrine to come outside with their guns and demand protesters leave.

America Public Schools prepare to train children in Marxist - BLM curriculum

Activist educators' allowing radical movement to 'warp' students' worldviews

Contributed by Franklin Motte, Moreno Valley CA

Public schools nationwide are adopting Black Lives Matter curriculum presenting themes such as "systemic racism," "police brutality" and "white privilege" while turning children into "little Marxists," according to the Federalist.

The New York City Department of Education is one of many school systems set to roll out the BLM-themed lesson plans this fall, write Sloan Rachmuth and Katie Jensen.

This summer, North Carolina's largest school system, in Wake County, launched a website providing BLM lessons for teachers to use in classrooms and for parents to use at home. It urges teachers to "address the injustices that exist beyond education by the conversations we have with others, by speaking up when we see hate, by supporting efforts that oppose racism and oppression, and by directly engaging in advocacy work."

The Federalist writers contend that while condemning racism is laudable, it's not what's really happening.

"By bringing BLM into the classroom, activist educators are allowing the most radically divisive movement in modern American history to warp children's worldviews," they write.

Wake County's BLM teaching resource appears to be a legitimate civics education resource, but it "lays out a cult-like recruiting process for students to follow. Step one: Recognize your white privilege. Step two: Learn the dos and don'ts of being an ally. Step three: Recruit more members to learn steps one and two."

Step three of the recruitment process states that "racial equity ac- countability must be tied to specific outcomes." The outcomes clearly are centered on activism on behalf of the BLM movement.

Noting BLM co-founder, Patrisse Cullors is featured on the homepage of the Wake County School System's website, The Federalist points out she and another co-founder are self-proclaimed "trained Marxists."

In a 2018 interview, Cullors also boasted of receiving training from a former member of the domestic terrorist group Weather Underground who was charged with attempted murder of police officers in Boston in 1969. (Bill Ayers and wife Bernardine Dohrn terrorist group.)

Cullors is a vocal anti-Israel activist and close ally of the anti-Semitic Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan. She organized a BLM event in Los Angeles May 30, 2020 in which three Jewish schools and five synagogues were vandalized with graffiti such as "Free Palestine" and "Fck Israel."

Another public school plan, in Philadelphia, aims to "work towards an anti-racist agenda" and "learning mindsets and practices rooted in Black liberation," The Federalist reports.

Black liberation is a Marxist theological and social movement that emerged in the late 1960s that regards America and all of its institutions as "systemically racist."

President Barack Obama's former spiritual leader Rev. Jeremiah Wright was a devotee who famously summed up the movement in a sermon: "No, no, no, not God bless America! God d-mn America."

Wimpy "Peaceful Rioters" Hide Behind Their Mamas

By Ernie C. Salgado Jr.

As far as I'm concerned the majority of the "Peaceful Rioters" are nothing more than a bunch of spoiled brats.

Recently in Portland, Oregon a group of women, claiming to be the mothers of the "Peaceful Rioters" banded together to form a human wall to protect their pampered children from federal officers enforcing the law.

Without the protection of the Cities mayor and State's Governor shielding them from law enforcement, the "Peaceful Rioters" were faced with real law enforcement that are allowed to restore "Law and Order."

The mothers claim that the Constitutional Rights of their undisciplined children have been violated by the federal authorities.

However, most people would agree that their has been no accountability for any of the violence, rioting, looting, destruction of public and private property in any of the liberal run Cities and States.

The federal officers sent to Portland are highly trained in counter terrorist tactics and as such the "Peaceful Rioters" have found themselves having to deal with legal law enforcement.

Their Constitutional Rights protection as a peaceful protest ends the second the first brick is thrown, store window is broke and fire is started.

And, since it appears that these mothers didn't teach their children to respect the rights and property of others, they might want to consider taking their spoiled children home before they are arrested and jailed.

Former Vice President Joe Biden received endorsements from several Muslim American leaders before addressing the Million Muslim Votes summit in July.

Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.), Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison, and Rep. Andre Carson (D-Ind.), were among several Muslim American officials who signed a letter endorsing Biden on Monday, July 20, 2020.

Omar's endorsement was especially notable seeing as she was a big supporter of Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) and continues to be a leading progressive voice in the House.

Biden then went on to open his speech with a request: "I wish we were taught more in our schools about the Islamic faith," calling it "one of the great confessional faiths" that "come[s] from the same root" as Christian religions.

Later in his video speech, Biden promised viewers he would end President Trump's ban on travel from several Muslim-majority countries "on day one."

The Million Muslim Votes Summit is organized by Emgage Action, the U.S.'s largest Muslim American PAC. Hillary Clinton didn't attend any Emgage events during her 2016 run, The Washington Post notes, and former President Barack Obama was "cautious" about doing so.

NORMAN, Okla. — Three Native candidates running for Congress in Oklahoma have easily advanced to the November 3, 2020 general election.

Republican Rep. Tom Cole, (Photo Above) a citizen of the Chickasaw Nation, won his primary Tuesday, (June 30, 2020) with more than 75 percent of the vote.

Cole is seeking his 10th term representing Congressional District 4 and is the longest-sitting Indigenous member of Congress. District 4 covers 15 counties in south-central Oklahoma.

Cole's reelection platform also leaves out Indian Country policy, but earlier this year he co-sponsored a bill with Democratic Rep. Deb Haaland of New Mexico to increase broadband access in Indian Country.

Republican Rep. Markwayne Mullin, Cherokee, earned more than 79 percent of the vote. (Photo Bottom)

Mullin is seeking a fifth term serving eastern Oklahoma's Congressional District 2.

The fiscal and social conservative rancher and business owner received some backlash, even from fellow Republican the late Sen. Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, during his last reelection for breaking a pledge he made to not seek more than three terms.

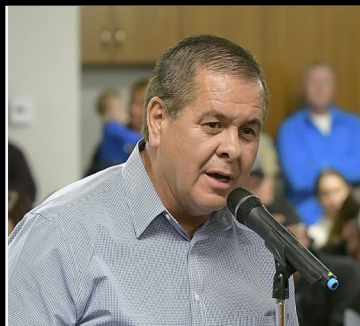

Mullin describes his tenure on Capitol Hill as a “duty” and has said in recent interviews that he still feels like he has work to get done before he retires from office.

"He is a strong supporter of President Trump's agenda to defeat the socialists in Washington, D.C., defend our cherished traditional values and protect the sanctity of life," according to his campaign website.

American Indian, Darren Parry win Democratic nomination for Utah 1st Congressional District.

Source: Indian Country Today

By Aliyah Chavez, Kewa Pueblo, is a reporter-producer at Indian Country Today's Phoenix Bureau.

Darren Parry, Northwestern Band of Shoshone Nation, has officially won the Democratic nomination for Utah's 1st Congressional District. He will face Republican Blake Moore in November's general election.

If Parry wins in November, he will be the first Democrat to represent Utah's 1st District — which serves the northern part of the state, including the Ute reservation — in nearly 40 years.

He is also one of eight Native candidates who won primary elections in their bids to Congress. Primaries for eight others are set for August.

Parry's win comes eight days after Utah's primary election was held. Votes between Parry and Jamie Cheek, his opponent, were so close that they were still being tallied.

On Wednesday night, Cheek formally conceded.

Parry won his election with 50.9 percent of the vote, while Cheek had 49.1 percent.

"We are grateful for the trust shown to us by Democrats in Congressional District 1," Parry said in a statement after his win. "We will continue sharing our vision for a better Utah and a better country with all of the residents of our district."

Parry's bid for office comes after Rep. Rob Bishop announced his retirement from Congress after 17 years.

Previously, Parry served as Northwestern Band of Shoshone Nation Chairman. He stepped down to run for Congress but remains on the tribal council.

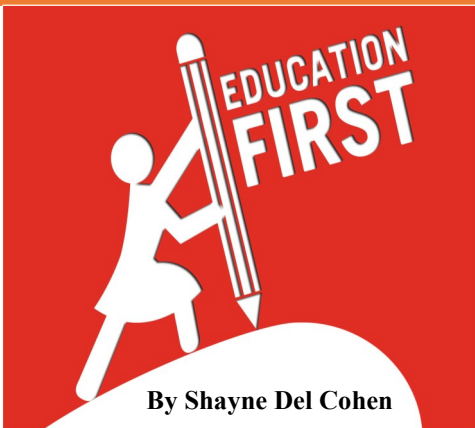

His campaign boasts endorsements from U.S. Rep. Deb Haaland of New Mexico, the Bear River Sunrise Movement and “the Sioux Chef,” Sean Sherman.

Parry is an author of “The Bear River Massacre; A Shoshone History.” He serves on several boards including the American Indian Services Board, American West Heritage Center and the Utah State Museum Board.

Shayne's Journal

Email: shayne@sprintmail.com

"To go to school or not, that is the question"

My personal opinion is that there is no one blanket answer. There are too many variables - size of district, student populations, district finances, community socio-economic status, geography, broadband access, to name a few - that must be considered and are so different across the country, that one resolution will not fit all. For many, "sheltering in place" may be the best option.

Thus, like so much, it all comes down to the local community, its leadership and its creativity.

As I have opined several times, these can be exciting times for tribal communities to fashion the educational environment and curriculum they would like to see for their K-12 students, (I will address post secondary at another time).

Where there is a choice to go back to a congregate school or stay home and do distance learning or for those for whom distance learning is the only option but parents cannot - or will not - serve as teachers/proctors, small communities have a distinct advantage.

Taking advantage of council chambers, churches, other tribal facilities with properly ventilated meeting rooms, libraries, museums, etc., socially distanced spaces can be created. School districts may be very grateful for additional space. Connectivity may be an issue but there are enough techno-geeks among us to resolve that.

Adults (or very responsible teens) who interact well with kids can serve as facilitators for the average two hours of instruction supplied by their local district. But then any subject the community wishes its young to enjoy may be added for another hour or two, by video or community instructors.

Many, many museums and libraries are offering free access to programming and instruction to keep their patrons engaged. There is no reason that your kiddos cannot visit Indian Country throughout the country or enjoy museums around the world as part of their day.

If there is a tribally operated school in your region, you may be able to begin a telecommuting arrangement with them for appropriate instruction.

If student population is large enough or available space constrictive, there can be "learning pod" scheduling, one in the morning, one in the afternoon. Or staggered days of attendance by each pod.

While traditional sports and other PE activities are not recommended, physical activity should not be ignored but no basketball, volleyball or football!

This is also a propitious time for those that like teaching to get their masters if they "already have a post secondary degree. Now that distance learning has firmly planted itself within our world, there are many "alternative colleges looking for students, the majority of which do concentrate on education. There are hundreds on Google.

The same is true for the (College) baccalaureate level; there are fewer for PhDs but they are there.

Enrolled high school and college students should contact their respective institutions to set up credit for being an instructor or proctor. Several states have programs wherein a certified journeyman may teach while becoming certified.

Many years ago I wrote some articles on how tribes are already libraries, albeit their collections spread out: law texts located in the courts/police departments; child development act HEADSTART, health and science materials at the clinic; literature, etc at the library/education department; flora/fauna information with buildings & grounds, cooking/home arts at the senior center, etc., etc.

It is not outside the realm of possibility for a tribe to determine where the potential teachers are. It is not beyond the scope of possibility for each department to develop short, age-appropriate presentations either in person or pre-recorded that can be "broadcast" and/or recorded to a learning pod within the community. Certainly career-education modules are a natural as are units on tribal government.

Traditionally, each adult is a teacher. It does take a village and it can be done.

Those interested should approach their school district (many will be looking for adjunct personnel to be able to facilitate their plans) to determine if that leadership is flexible, far-sighted and excited about being able to reach little pods of learners at once.

Understanding The Difference Saul Alinsky's "8-steps to Create a Socialist State"

I know it appear that I'm redundant with the continued posting of Saul Alinsky's "8-steps to Create a Socialist State." The 8-Steps are the bedrock of the American Socialist Democratic Party. I believe it's important for you to understanding want it means.

First, Who was Saul Alinsky? He was an American Marxist community organizer and writer. He is generally considered to be the founder of modern community organizing.

He is often noted for his book Rules for Radicals (1971) and his "8-steps to topple a nation and create a socialist state" which are as follows:

1)1) 1) Healthcare - Control healthcare and you control the people.

2) Poverty - Increase the Poverty level as high as possible, poor people are easier to control and will not fight back if you are providing everything for them to live.

3) Debt - Increase the debt to an unsustainable level. That way you are able to increase taxes, and this will produce more poverty.

4) Gun Control - Remove the ability to defend themselves from the Government. That way you are able to create a police state.

5) Welfare - Take control of every aspect of their lives (Food, Housing, and Income).

6) Education - Take control of what people read and listen to — take control of what children learn in school.

7) Religion - Remove the belief in the God from the Government and schools.

8) Class Warfare - Divide the people into the wealthy and the poor. This will cause more discontent and it will be easier to take (Tax) the wealthy with the support of the poor.

Is this the America you want?

Source: We Live Trump * Contributed by Andrea Marquez, Soboba Rez.

An evil Ohio black man who has been identified as 20-year-old Isai-ah Jackson. He was out on parole but has been thrown back in jail and is awaiting new felony charges after a photo circulated on social media showing him posing with his knee to the neck of a crying, White 2-year-old baby boy alongside a message referencing Black Lives Matter.

The Clark County Sheriff's Office first became aware of the photo circulating social media on Tuesday, July 21, 2020.

Patrol units were able to determine the location where the incident took place and made contact with both the mother and the child, as well as the male subject seen kneeling in the image, the Clark County Sheriff's Office said in an update on Facebook.

The relationship between Jackson and the child's mother is unknown.

Jackson, a parole authority holder from the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction, was taken into custody and remains incarcerated in the Clark County Jail. He is waiting for the county prosecutor "to provide a determination on the scope and breadth of the felony charges that will be supported by that office for presentation in court," according to the sheriff's office.

The child, who has not been identified by authorities, was taken to a local hospital for examination, where he was found to have no injuries related to the incident.

The sheriff's office said the mother, who also has not been identified, told deputies that "she was unaware of the photo having been taken, or its contents, until she had been informed by other parties while the Sheriff's Office was enroute to her home to begin the investigation into this incident." The investigation is ongoing.

John Echohawk, Pawnee: A True American Indian Warrior 'Treaties are still in full force'

My View By Ernie C. Salgado, Jr.

Most American Indians under the age of 60 most likely don't know who John Echohawk is or what he has done for the recognition American Indian Treaty Rights and the Human Rights in American.

John Echohawk was born on August 12, 1945 and is an enrolled member of the Pawnee Tribe in Oklahoma.

In early 1970 at the age of 24, Echohawk received his Law Degree, becoming the first Native American to graduate from the University of New Mexico School of Law and one of the less than 20 American Indian attorneys the Nation. He decided to use his knowledge to benefit American Indian legal and political issues.

Shortly after law school, he joined the staff of California Indian Legal Services (CILS) which was the only American Indian Legal service in the Country. CILS was founded in 1967 by Dr. David Resling, a tribal member of the Hoopa tribe in Northern California and a professor at the University of California at Davis.

Later the same year in 1970, Echohawk joined other lawyers and tribal members to form the Native American Rights Fund (NARF) which was modeled on California Indian Legal Services on a National level. Dr. Resling also played a significant role in establishing the organization.

The Native American Rights Fund is a non-profit law firm dedicated to protecting indigenous rights in the U.S.A.

Echohawk centered the Native American Rights Fund's focus around preserving tribes, protecting tribal resources, protecting human rights, ensuring government responsibility, expanding Indian law and educating people about Indian issues.

Fifty years ago the Native American Rights Fund hit the ground in the Nations Capitol at a full run. While the American Indian Movement and the occupancy of Alcatraz were page one, NARF was making historical political inroads in Congress, the federal courts and the White House with then President Nixon.

NARF played significant role with the Nixon administration in the development and passage of Public Law 93-638, "The Indian Self-Determination and Education Act of 1975." This single legislation changed the Government to Government relationship between the American Indian Tribes and the United States Government as it ended the "Governments Termination Policies" and recognized Tribal Sovereignty.

The Native American Rights Fund under the leadership of John Echohawk has had a range of civil rights successes, from government recognition of the reach of tribal sovereignty to passage of the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act.

The Native American Rights Fund embodies the mission to: preserve tribal existence, protect tribal natural resources, promote human rights, ensure accountability of governments, and, develop Native North American law and educate the public about Native American rights, laws, and issues.

John is the older brother of Idaho politician Larry Echohawk, who served as Idaho's State Attorney General from 1991-1995, and as director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the President Barack Obama administration. John was influential in encouraging Larry to follow him in gaining a law degree.

John Echohawk served on President Obama's first transition team on Indian affairs. He was considered by the Obama administration as a possible nominee to the federal bench.

The brothers are cousins of Walter Echohawk, a senior staff attorney at the Native American Rights Fund who contributed to the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act.

The following comment were made by John Echohawk in a recent video interview with Mark Trahan, Editor of Indian Country Today. The video was funded by the San Manuel Band of Mission Indians in Southern California s anchoring Indian Country Today this week.

"Human rights issues have always been one of the priority issues the Native American Rights Fund focuses on."

"Being involved in these issues over the last 50 years, of course, the ultimate decision maker is the U.S. Supreme Court, so that's always been our focus."

"They are basically the ones who decide what federal Indian law is. In the seventies, eighties into the nineties, we had a nice run there where tribes won most of their cases going up before the court."

"And there was an inordinate number of those cases going up because for so many years, we didn't really have any legal representation on our issues because, you know, our people are poor, couldn't afford lawyers."

"But then when we came along as a nonprofit and started raising money, making these lawyers available to our people to bring up these important cases, then things really took off."

"Most recently in this administration there was a vacancy that President Trump filled with Neil Gorsuch. And so we did research on his record, it was a good record. We reported that to the tribal leaders, they supported him. And of course he got confirmed. He's been on the court."

"He knows his federal Indian law very well. He was a judge on the 10th circuit court of appeals in Denver for a number of years. And of course there's many tribes in that 10th circuit area. So he had a lot of experience dealing with those federal Indian law issues plus being a westerner. He knows tribes and he knows the Native people. It's very helpful."

"Justice Gorsuch leading the way and his a real focus is on separation of powers. And Congress, you know, basically approves the treaties and they're the only ones who can change it and not the judges. And so he really looks at the language of the treaties and whether Congress has changed anything. And it doesn't matter what the judges think if Congress didn't act to change the treaties then the treaties are still in full force and effect."

"The number of Native American lawyers have grown in law schools, virtually all of Western law schools now teach federal Indian law, a number of the Eastern law schools teaching. And now even out West with the bar exams, there's usually Indian law questions on there because these days, most legal practitioners are going to run into an Indian law question sooner or later because things have changed we're on the map."

"Tribal leaders always make that clear that our issues are not, you know, Democratic issues or Republican issues. They're basically national issues. They're nonpartisan, that's the way they're dealt with on the Hill."

"It really sprang out of this Tribal Supreme Court Project, again. I think it was 2013, I think seven years ago, the Supreme Court decided a case called Shelby County and in that case, basically they gutted the Federal Voting Rights Act, the key provision in that act, which required a pre-clearance of changes in state voting laws by the justice department before they went into effect."

"Because there are a lot of discriminatory changes in voting laws that states were trying to do and so that's why the voting rights act was passed, to stop that. And so a key provision was the pre-clearance in 2013 in the Shelby County case, the Supreme Court declared that invalid, unconstitutional."

"We have to make sure that we are able to get our people out as part of our work and voting rights area. We did a series of hearings across the country where we explored the obstacles to Indian voting. And based on all of those hearings over the years, we put together a report that was recently released that talks about all the obstacles that our people face trying to vote. And we worked with Senator Udall and others there in the Congress to put together a Native American Voting Rights Act that addresses all of those issues that causes us problems in terms of trying to vote. And that's pending in the Congress right now."
