President Trump signed Savanna's Act & Not Invisible Act New missing & murdered laws hailed as 'huge victory'

Source: Indian Country Today By Joaqlin Estus, Tlingit, is a national correspondent for Indian Country Today, and a long-time Alaska journalist
The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Following the establishment of the "Missing and Murdered Indian Women's Task Force" last year, President Donald Trump signed Savanna's Act and the Not Invisible Act on Saturday, October 10, 2020.

The two new laws addressing the issue of missing and murdered Native Americans are drawing widespread praise from tribal advocates as a step toward addressing the serious needs identified by tribes and experts in law enforcement and justice, including better data collection, coordination and increased resources.

Julie Kitka, Chugach Eskimo and president of the statewide advocacy organization Alaska Federation of Natives, called the legislation a "huge victory for Native families seeking justice."

Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez and Vice President Myron Lizer in a statement thanked the bills' sponsors, grassroots advocates and others who "fought long and hard to push these important measures over the finish line to help bring an end to the ongoing losses of life, trauma and devastation caused by the missing persons crisis across our country."

Other supporters noted the laws bring hope to communities grappling with the effects of violence.

On some reservations, Native American women are murdered at a rate of 10 times the national average. And 84 percent of Native American women experience violence in their lifetime.

Homicide is the third leading cause of death for Native American and Alaska Native women and girls, yet advocates say cases have long been overlooked.

A 2018 study by the Urban Indian Health Institute, a tribal epidemiology center, showed that of 5,712 cases reported by the National Crime Information Center, only 116 were in the Justice Department database.

The lack of data is at the root of several problems. Without information, advocates are hard-pressed to come up with or measure the effectiveness of remedies.

Police, policy makers, and legislators allocate fewer resources for investigation, research and aid for victims' families, who are also pained by the lack of public awareness.

Savanna's Act is named for Savanna Greywind, Sioux of the Spirit Lake Nation. The 22-year-old pregnant Savanna was murdered in Fargo, North Dakota, in 2017 and her unborn baby was cut from her body. Two people are in prison in her death. Her baby survived.

Savanna's Act requires the Justice Department to develop guidelines for responding to cases of missing or murdered Native Americans, to develop a public education strategy, to provide law enforcement agency training, and to work with tribes and tribal organizations in implementation.

Savanna's Act gives the U.S. attorney general 180 days from its signing to consult with tribes on improved data collection.

The Not Invisible Act aims to increase coordination of efforts. It establishes a joint commission to develop recommendations for the departments of Interior and Justice. The commission is to come up with ideas for better identifying, reporting and responding to cases of missing persons, murder and human trafficking.

The urban institute found states with the highest rates of missing and murdered Indigenous women were: New Mexico (78), Washington (71), Arizona (54), Alaska (52), Montana (41), California (40), Nebraska (33), Utah (24), Minnesota (20), and Oklahoma (18).

(See: Justice for missing and murdered Indigenous women and their families must be a priority)

The issue is "very personal to every Indigenous woman," Marci McLean, executive director of Montana-based advocates Western Native Voice, recently told Talli Nauman of Native Sun News Today. "Most Indigenous women have a story of a friend or relative who has gone missing or has been murdered."

McLean, Amskapi Piikani of the Blackfeet Nation, said the legislation would "open up the conversation on a national level" to address causes of violence and injustice towards Indigenous women and other women of color.

North Dakota Native Vote board member Lisa Casarez, of the Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara Nation, joined McLean in the statement, saying passage of the legislation means a lot, Nauman reported.

"Although it won't bring Savanna back, it can provide Savanna and her family some semblance of justice," Casarez said. "This can be one good thing that comes from a horrible murder that has happened right here in our own state and has affected Native communities across North Dakota and beyond."

Savanna's Act was introduced in 2017 by former Democratic Sen. Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota. It was reintroduced in the current Congress by Republican Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska. The bills were passed by the Senate in March and the House last month.

Murkowski said in a statement Saturday: "Today we've reached a huge milestone in our efforts to provide justice for victims, healing for their families and protection for women, children and families across the nation."

Democratic Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto of Nevada sponsored the Not Invisible Act. She said in a statement that the "signing puts us on a path towards greater justice for thousands of Native women and girls that have been missing, trafficked, or taken far too soon and puts into place the tools needed to give our Native sisters, mothers and daughters greater security."

(Vivian Korthuis, Yup'ik, is CEO of the Association of Village Council Presidents, which represents 56 tribes in western Alaska. She praised the new laws but said rural Alaska's public safety crisis has many causes, including "lack of access to public safety personnel and facilities and therefore an inability to protect our most vulnerable tribal members; as well as the epidemic of missing and murdered Alaska Native peoples."

Saul Alinsky's "8-steps to Create a Socialist State" is the bedrock of the American Socialist Democratic Party. Who was Saul Alinsky? He was an American community organizer and writer. He is generally considered to be the founder of modern community organizing. He is often noted for his book Rules for Radicals (1971) and his "8-steps to topple a nation and create a socialist state" which are as follows:

- 1) Healthcare—Control healthcare and you control the people.
- 2) Poverty—Increase the Poverty level as high as possible, poor people are easier to control and will not fight back if you are providing everything for them to live.
- 3) Debt — Increase the debt to an unsustainable level. That way you are able to increase taxes, and this will produce more poverty.
- 4) Gun Control — Remove the ability to defend themselves from the Government. That way you are able to create a police state.
- 5) Welfare — Take control of every aspect of their lives (Food, Housing, and Income).
- 6) Education — Take control of what people read and listen to — take control of what children learn in school.
- 7) Religion — Remove the belief in the God from the Government and schools.
- 8) Class Warfare — Divide the people into the wealthy and the poor. This will cause more discontent and it will be easier to take (Tax) the wealthy with the support of the poor.

Voters don't deserve to know My position on court-packing Biden Tells reporters know his position on court-packing.

On Friday, October 9, 2020 preme Court and pack it with Biden told a Las Vegas report- ideologically liberal justices if er that voters don't deserve to they return to power.

The reporter asked, "Well, sir, don't the voters deserve to know?"

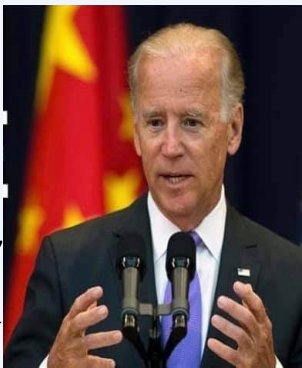

"No, they don't," Biden responded. "I'm not gonna play his game, he'd love me to talk about, and I've already said something on court-packing, he'd love that to be the discussion instead of what he's doing now. He's about to make a pick in the middle of an election, first time it's ever been done, first time in history it's ever been done."

"The only court packing going on right now is going on with Republicans packing the court right now," Biden said.

"It's not constitutional what they're doing," he added. "I'm going to stay focused on it so we don't take our eyes off the ball here."

Court-packing became a major issue in the election after Republicans vowed to confirm Amy Coney Barrett to the Supreme Court prior to Election Day. Democrats responded by threatening to expand the Su-

Of course, court-packing, which was once attempted by former President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, would remove partiality from the court.

But as Biden has continued to dodge answering questions about court-packing, Democrats have been circulating a falsehood about the Republican Party — that they're packing courts already.

Such claims are not true.

By definition, court-packing involves expanding the number of justices on a given court. In 1937, FDR advocated expanding the Supreme Court, via what is now referred to as his "court-packing plan," to obtain favorable rulings after significant portions of his New Deal were ruled unconstitutional.

Republicans, of course, have not expanded the number of seats on any federal court. They have, however, taken advantage of their Senate majority during a Republican presidency by confirming more than 200 conservative-leaning justices on every level of the federal judiciary.

Concerned Women for America, a conservative Christian group headed by Penny Nance that bills itself as the "nation's largest public policy women's organization," has launched a 12-state bus tour in support of U.S. Supreme Court nominee Amy Coney Barrett.

"If we've learned anything from the confirmation process of Brett M. Kavanaugh, it's that the left will stoop to anything," Nance said in a video on Instagram. "The attacks on her faith, the anti-Christian bigotry isn't just attacks against her. It's an attack on you. That's why Concerned Women for America is going to hit the road."

As Barrett draws scrutiny from liberals over her involvement in People of Praise, a small Christian organization where she once served as a "handmaid," the bus tour points to how antiabortion activists are citing her faith to rally behind her.

"What a historic moment for conservative Christian women," Nance said in the video. "We get to sit on the sidelines of history and witness the confirmation of one of our own: a conservative Christian constitutionalist appointed by President Trump to the Supreme Court."

Senate confirmation hearings started Monday, October 12, 2020 and with nearly all Republican senators having committed to supporting the Trump nominee, she is expected to be voted through as soon as October 22, 2020.

Nance's bus, however, is set to keep traveling around the country through the end of the month, looping from Pennsylvania to the Midwest and then south to Texas and Arizona.

JANE FONDA, "IT'S HARD FOR ME TO BREATHE IN DONALD TRUMP'S AMERICA!"

Antifa Operative Was Caught on Hot Mic, Plans for Election Night

Democrat "operative" Kristopher Jacks, Jacks was videoed bragging about his "2020 is a Political Revolution." He plans. "I am going to do everything morally acceptable to win. I will lie. I admitted on a hot mic that radical socialists have plans to "change this country with violence." There's only one way to do it, "Guillotines." Election night's just the beginning of a revolution. On Election Night he's "gonna be in my garage, right next to my gun safe, all night long."

Former Vice President Joe Biden said "Antifa is only an idea" and last year he celled them "Patriots." But it seems Jacks didn't get that memo and already has plans. "If you want to do some Antifa sh*t. You really want to change this country that way, with violence, there's only one way to do it," he declares.

Kill the rich. He suggests that "random billionaires" are about to "start turning up dead." with "Bezos at the top of the list." He didn't realize that he was talking to someone all wired up for sound and video.

As explained by Project Veritas founder, James O'Keefe, "Jacks represents the radical wing of the Democratic Party in Colorado." A group called "Our Revolution" is a proud partner of the the Democratic Party coalition.

right underestimates "how many people on the left are organized, trained, armed, and ready to go should they decide to do their sh*t"

Jacks confirmed what conservatives have been saying all along. The left has used the money George Soros shelled out to them to raise a rabble army. "We have the army already. We're gonna show up in numbers. We're gonna show up in mass."

Jacks won't let anyone stand in the way of his plans. "I will knock people down the stairs," he promises. "I believe there is absolutely justified violence in all sorts of circumstances." The radical simply idolizes Antifa. "Antifa's great, man." He gets fired up over "people marching in the street, running people over and sh*t like that." People "firing guns, trying to provoke sh*t"
